Green Resources for Film Productions Wanted for Film Commission Website Listings

The Monterey County Film Commission has posted on its website, .FilmMonterey.org, a “Green Resources Guide” for filmmakers from the California Film Commission. It’s a web-based tool designed to help productions reduce their environmental impact with information for finding resources such as post-consumer products, sustainably farmed lumber, food banks that accept surplus meals, and equipment such as bio-diesel generators.

The Monterey County Film Commission is localizing the guide and streamlining contacts for film production green resources in Monterey County. Submit information for products and services via email at @filmmonterey.org. For more information, call 831-646-0910.

The Monterey County Film Commission is part of the non-profit Film Liaisons in California, Statewide (FLICS), an extensive network of over 50 regional film offices that offer on-the-ground logistical support for filmmakers and insights into the diverse landscape across the state.
